

Using Wikis in Teaching and Learning

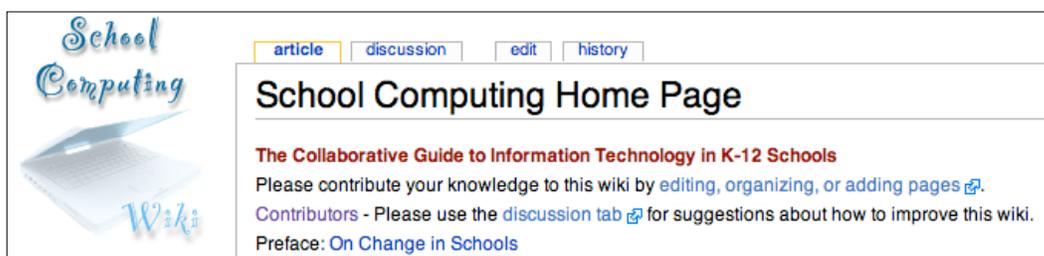

Before jumping to a wiki project, it's a good idea to edit an existing wiki. Let's use a wiki that's already online.

Go to School Computing Wiki

http://schoolcomputing.wikia.com/wiki/School_Computing_Home_Page

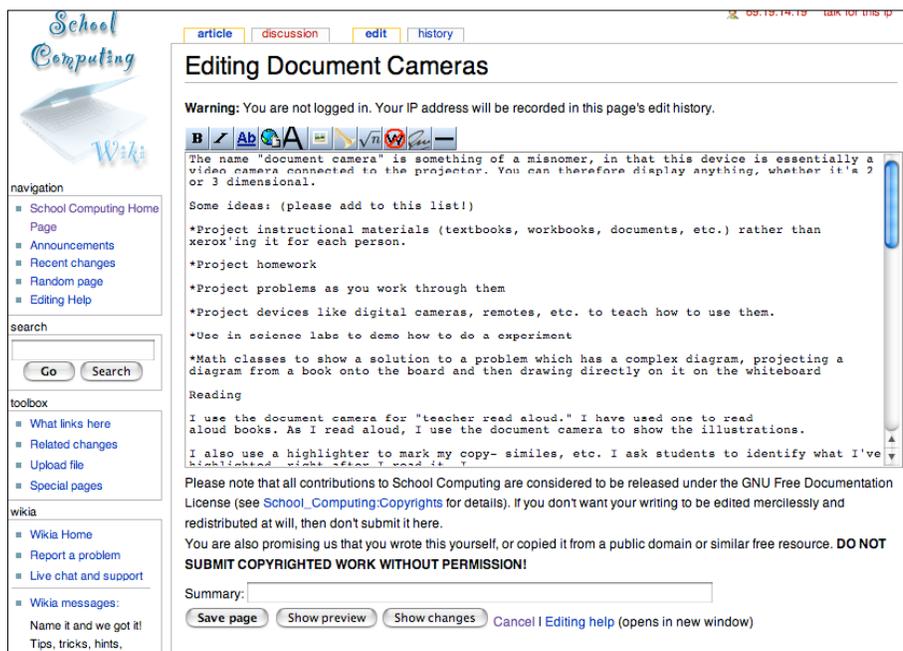

Browse the pages until you find a place where you might make a correction or add an idea.

Click the edit tab above the article.

Scan through the page and make your correction. If needed, use the formatting buttons that have been provided.

Press the Save button.

Digital Photography Wiki

Go to <http://digitalphotography.wikispaces.com>
Click the Sign In option in the upper right corner.
Enter your edublog username and password.

Read through the pages using the link. When you're ready to edit a page, click the Edit This Page tab across the top of the page.

Creating a Wikispace Wiki

Create an edublog first. Choose the wikispace option in your dashboard. It will direct you to <http://www.wikispaces.com/site/for/edublogs>. This will create a free, ad-free blog.

OR - Go to Wikispaces at <http://www.wikispaces.com>

Create a username and password. You can use your edublogs password.

Create a name for your wiki that will be used as the web address. The name should be a single word.

Set the level of access as public, protected, or private. We'll use public. You'll see an entry page. Notice the tabs at the top, navigation on the left, and links on the main page.

Make a New Space Now

Edit Your Entry Page

You don't really want the wikispace directions on your first page, so you'll want to delete them.

Enter your text.

You can also change fonts, add links, and upload pictures. Notice all the options in the menu bar about the writing area.

Notice that you can also add tags for search engines at the bottom.

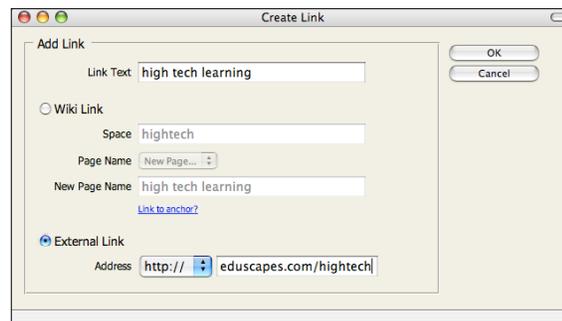

Click Save.

Add a Hyperlink

Select text for your hyperlink.

Click on the hyperlink button  .

Choose a wiki link or an external link. Internal pages should be a single name such as hightech, not high tech. The pull down menu lets you choose a page within the

Add a Picture or Movie

Click at the location where you'd like your picture or movie to appear. Click the picture  or movie  button. New options will show on the right side of your window. If you've already uploaded visuals, they will show in window. Browse to find the picture on your hard drive. Click Upload.

Double-click on the photo you wish to add to your wiki page. Click Save.

If you prefer more control over the formatting of your wiki you can choose the Text View.

More Editing

In a wiki, you're encouraged to go back and edit your pages or the pages of others! If you run into problems, you may need to clear your cache or accept cookies.
